

Pomegranate

Why we love Yes lube

Posted on Oct 28 in Sex News tagged fabulous, lube, organic by Amy

This is one blog post I don't know how to start.

Should I start with the fact that Yes is frankly the best product on the market? Because it's been developed and bought to market by two British ladies? Because it's Organic and Soil Association approved with a full supply chain audit? Because it's so body safe it can be used by ladies recovering from chemotherapy? Or do I start with the fact it's available in both water based and oil based variations?

Lets start with the basics. The best sex is wet sex. Of course, there's nothing like natural wetness, but sometimes things happen and when that does, reach for Yes.

Yes has been lovingly designed to remain completely odourless and tasteless, so it doesn't interfere with your natural smells or tastes, it just moistens things up a little, stops things sticking! The water based Yes also rehydrates your vaginal cells, keeping you healthy and well.

When you're playing with your toys, please make sure you're using water-based Yes. This is also true of love eggs. We always use a little bit of Yes water to help our love eggs slide on for our pelvic floor regime, every lady knows the benefits of a strong pelvic floor!

If you're looking for a longer love making session and have a history of vaginal dryness, we recommend using oil-based Yes first, and then adding a few drops of water-based Yes on top. Then you'll be slippery, slidey and moist for as long as you need.

Another huge benefit of Yes is what's missing. There are no parabens, glycerine, glycols, grapefruit see extract, sodium benzoate or mineral oil. In laymens terms, these are all nasties found throughout KY Jelly, Durex, Sylk and Repiens. Some mimic your natural hormones, some are skin irritants, some trigger thrush and generally, once we knew about these, we wanted none of it.

All in all, if we had a rooftop we'd be shouting from it. Ladies from Yes, we salute you.